

CALL FOR PAPERS

Special Issue of the International Review of Economics & Finance

The emerging global financial architecture and exchange rate regimes in a volatile world

The International Review of Economics & Finance invites manuscripts for a Special Issue on “The emerging global financial architecture and exchange rate regimes in a volatile world,” scheduled for publication in 2010.

The ongoing global liquidity crisis is a watershed event that calls for reevaluation of the emerging global financial architecture. Topics that deserve renewed assessments include: Financial globalization; Exchange rate regimes and monetary rules in the open economy; the global financial architecture and new regulatory challenges; International reserves, swaps and new pooling arrangements, etc...

The deadline for paper submission is 28 February 2010. Papers will be peer reviewed on an expedited track. Authors will be notified within 3 months of this deadline of the decision on their paper.

Special Issue editor: Joshua Aizenman, [UCSC and the NBER] and Michael Hutchison [UCSC]

Electronic Submission Procedure: All manuscripts should be double-spaced and submitted as Word documents to Joshua Aizenman at jaizen@ucsc.edu before 28 February 2010. Each submission should include two Word files of the manuscript, one with author information and another without for a blind review process. The paper may not exceed 30 double-spaced pages. The submission fee is $80 US for all authors. Checks or money orders made payable to IREF should be sent to:
